49. EAST TO WEST - AUSTRALIA

Alby and Jo travel to the cotton growing region on the east coast of Australia. Cotton is a crop that has only recently been introduced to the area. It is also a very thirsty crop. Newly developed water damming strategies for the cotton crop are adversely affecting the flow of the Murray River, and Alby is very concerned at how this decreasing water flow is damaging the delicate eco systems. At a night rodeo in Queensland's bush country, Alby and Jo watch local cowboys risk their lives as they ride bucking Brahma bulls. They then travel to Western Australia for an aerial view of The Ord River and travel through the Bungle Bungle an eerie almost alien landscape dating back to pre-historic times.

50. KAGARI TO NIMBIN - AUSTRALIA

Alby and Jo go for a long hike on Kagari, Fraser Island, huge sand island off the coast of Queensland. They see much of the wild life while trekking through lush tropical inland rainforests, including koalas, goanna and dingos. We learn about the devastating effect that early European settlers had on the local Aboriginal population and Alby meets the last remaining local Aboriginal living there. Back on the mainland they travel to Nimbin, a town known for its alternative subculture and hippie population, and meet a family who have embraced this alternative lifestyle. Nearby on a communal farm a camel has broken its back in a fall and Alby, along with some of the locals, attempts to help the distressed animal recover.

51. LAND OF THE FERALS - AUSTRALIA

Alby and Jo travel into the Queensland hinterland to an area where communities of alternative lifestyle people live. These people live an almost feral life within the valleys and forests relying on very little help or support from the outside world. It is a rough life and one they choose for themselves and enjoying living. These groups of people are committed to protecting the environment and think of themselves as "guardians of the earth". Alby learns what drives them and leads them to protest against mining industry projects in the region. He discovers the environmental damage cost by the companies is frightening in the extreme.

52. OVER THE HORIZON - NEW HEBRIDES & VANUATU

After sailing around Africa and South America in "space", his 52 foot catamaran, Alby is ready to return to the Pacific. In the new Hebrides and Vanuatu he experiences a way of life on tiny islands with native peoples where he is able to relish turning the clock back 50 years. Marvel at how people with "nothing" in Western terms have such a ready smile, and understand why this group of islands has been called "The Happiest Place on Earth".

54. ISLAND DREAMING - NEW HEBRIDES & VANUATU

Alby and Jo sail through the Vanuatu group of islands on their 43ft Catamaran Zenani. It is an idyllic and easy going tropical journey with no schedules to kept. Along the way they stop at several islands to meet the locals and learn a little about their unhurried way of life. On one of the islands they learn about the slave trade called "black birding" that was prevalent here less than 100 years ago. Alby then finds a WW2 ship wreck on a shallow reef and explores it using a 6ft long air hose connected to a breathing apparatus floating on the surface. On Pentecost Island, Alby and Jo witness the ancient practice of land diving (a local version of bangle jumping).

55. DISCOVERING A PRESIDENT - NEW HEBRIDES & VANUATU

The SS President Coolidge, once a vast merchant ship, was stripped of her finery, painted haze grey, mounted with guns and turned into a troop carrier during WWII. Arriving at the island of Santo, fearing Japanese submarines and unaware of submerged mines, the vessel was fatally struck. In a dive akin to entering a 40 story unit building at night, risking the fate of previous divers who became so lost and her bowels they never returned, Alby investigates this ill-fated dame of the South Pacific Ocean.

56. REMOTE CONTACT - SOLOMON ISLANDS

Alby and Jo sail to the capital of the Solomon Islands, Honiara, before making a long journey to one of the most distant and isolated islands on 2 small inter island plains and 2 canoes. Once they reach the island they trek inland and climb into the hills to a village where the locals live exactly as they have done for 1,000 years, getting a glimpse of a people who are linked with nature and whose survival depends on hard physical labour and resourcefulness in an unforgiving jungle. Jo starts to feel very ill. Alby is not sure whether her illness is due to the local food or if it is something more serious like Malaria. Not wanting to take a chance he decides on a sea voyage by canoe to take her to the nearest hospital over a treacherous rising swell.

57. NORTH TO SOUTH - AUSTRALIA

Alby is invited to go on an epic 4WD journey through the heart of Australia. At the Gulf of Carpentaria he meets some rugged characters who make a living catching huge mud crabs while avoiding the ever-present crocodiles. He then travels to Alice Springs, right in the centre of Australia. Here we glimpse some of the problems faced by Australia's indigenous Aboriginals. A long and gruelling journey through the Simpson Desert, one of the most desolate and arid in the Southern Hemisphere, takes us to the outback town of Birdsville where Alby discovers some of the old farming ways of being kept alive. We then hop aboard a twin turbo prop plane to travel alone one of the longest and most unique mail delivery runs in the world.

64. ALBY'S COORONG - AUSTRALIA

There is no doubt in Alby's mind that of all the places on earth he has visited he has chosen the best one to call home. In this film he takes the opportunity to share with his audience the remarkable features that make the Coorong what it is: One of the top bird-watching locations and the world, a sacred Aboriginal land, and a haven for migratory pelicans who have been landing there since before recorded history. To Alby this is eternal beauty of the place he has made his own.

66. RESTORING THE GRETTA MARIE - YOU CAN'T LIVE ON MEMORIES

NEVER BEFORE SEEN ANYWHERE IN THE WORLD

As was typical with many of Alby's endeavours, he set himself a particularly difficult challenge to reconstruct square topsail ketch. He installed an engine and assembled a jury rig consisting of an eleven meter long mast and a piece of five centimetre round water pipe that was six meters long as a yard arm. Over this he hung a large piece of canvass making crude sail and advertised for crew to help him sail from Mooloolaba to Adelaide. With a crew of five they left Queensland replete with seven 44-gallon drums of fuel, two drums of water, and spare masts and parts lashed to the deck. It took years before his pride and joy was finally christened the Gretta Marie.
